Historical Context:

This document is a 'Krsni List' (Baptismal Certificate), which serves as an official extract from the Roman Catholic parish register of Holy Trinity in Cerovac. Although the baptism took place in 1892, this specific certificate was issued on August 9, 1937, during the era of the Kingdom of Yugoslavia (specifically within the Sava Banovina). Such certificates were essential for legal identification, marriage applications, or emigration during the interwar period. The record provides vital genealogical data, including the child's birth and baptism dates, parents' names and occupations, and the names of godparents. The mention of 'mlinari' (millers) as the parents' occupation indicates they were part of a specialized trade, likely living near a water source or a local mill, which was a central part of rural economic life.
